EQUINE-AROMATHERAPY

Aromatherapist Rvt. Rana Babac Celebi

Many aspects of equine-care today is based on convenience and traditional practices. These practice methods generally do not take into account the natural equine-behavior. For one thing horses are prey animals. Their natural response to dangerous and painful situations is to flee and such that horses avoid potentially risky situations. If/when horses' attempts to avoid a stressor, a scary and/or a painful stimuli are prevented, they will often exhibit behavior issues. Which I tackle with universal methodologies of horsemanship while mimicking the silent language of horses through the use of pure botanical essential.
